some sort with every big picture that plays there. Misses Edna McCulloch, Alice Witt and Virginia Blakely appeared in the musical prologue for "The Eternal Flame."

Janesville people, holding tickets for Chicago Grand Opera company, are now enjoying them, seeing some of the best productions which the opera company is producing. It looks like a banner year for Chicago Grand Opera, with the company already having been given with opera in its third week. "The Snow Maiden," a Russian opera, has been one of the first novelties, and one of the best operas given.

AT THE BEVERLY.
Marshall Neilan, whose latest production comes to the Beverly next week, has a curious knack of understanding what people want. Perhaps that is why his pictures are all so well liked. He realizes all heroes are not id-virtuous, heroines all ingenious, nor "id-virtuous" all heroes, and he knows that people like to see pictures in which the hero gives way to temptation once in a while, and the villain knows such a strong character that temptation cannot seem to touch him.

So in "Fools First," Neilan brings out in the character of Tommy Brazier, played by handsome Richard Dix, the bad part, overcome in the end by the aid of the girl, Anna Whitaker, played by Claire Windsor. Both are of the underworld, where they have grown up, and both are struggling to get out of the rut. But the temptation to do "second-story" work is too strong for Brazier, and he starts bank-note forgery. The girl tells him she will be at the depot to flee with him, but when he gets there and meets her, he sees she is no longer the girl he loved, and he returns the notes to the kind old banker, who all the time had been waiting for him to put out the money. Claire Gillingwater, the "lovely" father of "Broadway Rose," the "lovely" father of "Broadway Rose," is the part of the banker in this, and again proves himself one of the best-liked character actors in the country.

Claire Windsor also plays at the Beverly in the Thanksgiving special, but plays an entirely different part in the same country. A John M. Stahl production, "One Clear Call," contains some of the strongest drama of recent times. It has excitement, great love scenes, and pure drama. Night-riders in their robes of white, gathering in large numbers and avenging wrongs, furnish weird scenes that are as unforgettable as similar ones in the first great masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." Drama is furnished by the struggles of the wife against the three evil men, and the man with both men loving her. All three leading characters play their parts notably well. Claire Windsor is the lovely girl, over as the wife, while the two men, both fighting for the same object, are portrayed by Henry D. Walthall and Milton Sills, both equally well-liked in motion pictures. Others in the cast are Joseph B. Dowling, famous as The Miracle Man in the picture of that name, Irene Rich and Shannon Day.

The pictures for Saturday are both western features, "The Timber Queen," being an exciting serial, and "The Son of the Wolf," an adaptation of Jack London's story. Both Roberts play the leading role. Indians, animals, deep woods and snow figure prominently.

AT THE APOLLO.
Monday night's show at the Apollo theater next week is to mean a lot to some woman—a hat, and a mighty smart one. In fact, Manager James Zanias has announced to give away a smart hat to the girl who wins a picture with Mae Murray hat, similar to one she wears in her latest production, "Broadway Rose," to some woman in the audience at the first show Monday night. It has been placed on view at a downtown store.

Mae Murray has won a large gathering by means of the last two productions, "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," the latter seen here but two weeks ago. Both were lavish productions, and were still heightened in value by the unusual, amusing and strong acting of Miss Murray. In "Broadway Rose," playing the part of a dancer, she has an equally strong part, and plays it well, introducing her own novel comedy throughout.

COUNCIL TO ACT ON PARK PROPOSAL

Purchase of Riverside Tract For $25,000 to be Discussed.

City councilmen at their bi-weekly meeting at 7:30 Monday night are expected to give further consideration to the city plan commission's proposal for municipal purchase of the Riverside park tract of land of some 133 acres along the west bank of Rock river just north of the city. After holding off for several months, the commission has finally succeeded in getting an offer to dispose of the property for $25,000 and is now up to the council to give the final answer.

There is much speculation as to what position the aldermen will take, being too expensive and the site as undesirable, while others look upon it as the only tract left which is suitable for park purposes and are anxious to see it carry. Should the property be acquired, it would mean practically no addition to the budget except for maintenance as the city now has $10,000 in a permanent park purchase fund and $5,000 more could be appropriated in 1924 and 1925, as has been the custom for three years.

Other matters due to be acted upon by the council Monday night, are: Election of a successor to Alvin Hemmens as alderman of the Second ward; the claim of Mrs. Mary Herdendorf for $5,000 damages as the result of a fall on a sidewalk; and a fight on the proposal to extend the ornamental lighting system on South Jackson street, from Pleasant to Eastern avenue, and South Main street, from St. Lawrence to Racine street.

Enforcement of the plan to have the city purchase Riverside park as a public grounds was made by the board of directors of the local Chamber of Commerce at a meeting in the Chamber rooms, Friday afternoon.

The meeting was attended by Francis Grant of the city planning commission. The plan is to act before the council Monday night.

The park totals 133 acres. The price mentioned is $25,000.

The Wall Flower

By MARION RUBINCAM

Next day was Sunday, which meant that everyone slept late. Sleeping late, however, was only half an hour's grace over the usual early rising hour. But Dora committed an indiscretion—she quite overslept. Last night she had been too tired to sleep at once. And there was this new friend to think about, so it had been far into the morning before she slept. She awoke to hear her aunt's voice.

"My land, Dora! Do you know what time it is, young lady? Almost eight—where's the sugar?"

"Where's what?" Dora asked, wondering in her dazed sleep state what sugar had to do with time, or anything else.

"The sugar that I sent you for to Dyer's," came excitedly and ungrammatically.

The girl was awake now, alarmed. "Oh that sugar—I used that for the fudge last night."

"Oh, you did! And here were snowed in so no one can get out for days, for more, and it's Sunday anyway, and not a drop in the house."

This strange sentence conveyed a meaning to the girl. She jumped out of bed, shivered, and began dressing as hastily as possible. Down in the kitchen she began explaining:

"You only told me three pounds—and Gladys wanted a lot of candy and then you used some for dessert. We had some more—"

"What went into the cake—and now your uncle wants candied sweets for dinner, and only a spoonful left in the whole place. And you know how he rakes up the last bit and have what he wants to eat—"

She went on about breakfast, walking heavily. When she was angry she refused help with the work she refused help now. Dora went up to her room, to do the chamber work. She was terribly depressed, but not in the least angry. It was no good saying that her aunt had trained her to obey blindly always—never to use her judgment. She knew she was incredibly stupid.

Being clean, it will give a coarse grained skin an opportunity to become fine grained as Nature intended. Being astringent, it will draw up these enlarged pores and assist the skin back to normal fitness. And besides this it has one great virtue, it costs practically nothing so that even the poorest person can afford it and it is in every household cupboard so that anyone can use it.

Some readers want to know whether I mean corn starch or laundry starch. It doesn't really matter which you use, both are the starch part of the corn, but laundry starch is less expensive and quite as good. All you do is melt a few little lumps in enough water to make a paste the consistency of cream, and spread this over the skin and let it dry on for 15 minutes to half an hour. You can repeat this treatment every day. In very stubborn cases of blackheads I have found it even more effective to boil the starch and use it clear and fairly hot.

A. B. D.—When the skin on the elbows get dark soften it with cream and then scrub with hot water and soap, after which rub in moose cream until the skin has absorbed as much as possible. Wipe off surplus and use powder to protect them from taking up more soil.

Steady Reader—Consult the doctor about your condition, as hay fever is curable. If you let it run on, however, it will keep your health depleted.

Miscellaneous—Short hair will become oily much faster than longer hair, so it needs more frequent shampooing.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Starch will make the skin white, goes into the pores of the skin and absorbs the curious hard combination of grease and dirt which makes that ugly black mark. It is good for an oily skin because it absorbs the oil.

ALWAYS TIRED NO AMBITION

Nervous and Dizzy, Everything Seemed to Worry Me. How I Got Well

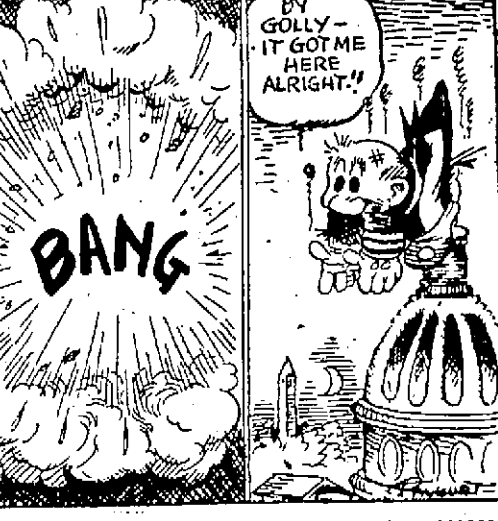

Larwill, Indiana—"My back was so bad I could not do my washing. I was always tired out and had no ambition, was nervous and dizzy and everything seemed to worry me and I had awful pains in my right side. I felt badly about four years and could not do my work as I should have been doing. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised so much and it did so many people good that I began to take it myself. I am feeling fine now and every one tells me they never saw me looking so well. I live on a farm, do all my work and have three little girls to take care of. I am recommending this medicine to my friends and know it will help them if they use it like I do."—Mrs. HERBERT LONG, R. 3, Box 7, Larwill, Indiana.

Many women keep about their work when it is a great effort. They are always tired out and have no ambition. When you are in this condition give it prompt attention.

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it is especially adapted to correct such troubles.

FOR LITTLE FRIENDLY FOLKS WHO LIKE ADVENTURES

"Don't kill him, boys," said the farmer. "But he eats birds' eggs," said Ted. "Yes, a few, that's true. But he also eats rats and mice and especially field mice that destroy grain. I wish I had a dozen of them around my place."

"But won't he bite?" asked Ted. Both Ned and the farmer laughed. "No, he won't bite you. He's harmless," they told him.

"You go know how to catch snakes alive?" asked the farmer. The boys did not.

"It's easy," said the farmer. "I'll show you," and he began looking about for some proper sticks. He found a stout ash stick about five feet long and carefully split one end of it back about two feet. Then he cut a smooth switch and peeled off the bark.

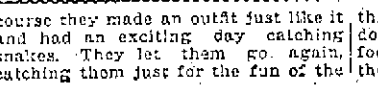

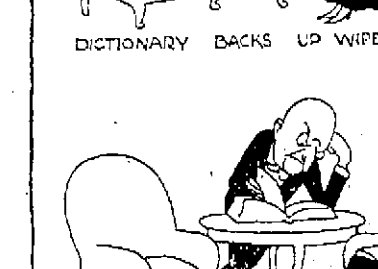

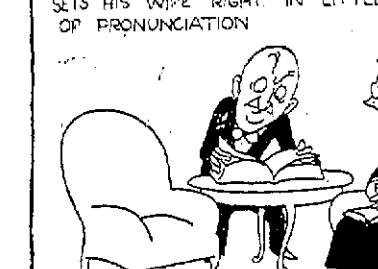

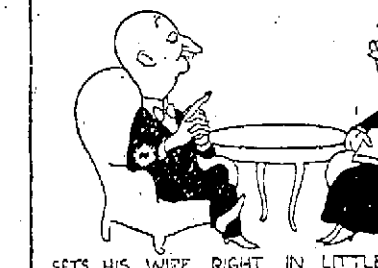

"A place of fine copper wire would be better, but you have nothing else, so your shoe lace," he said. "Here's some wire," said Ted. "I had it in my fishing kit."

The farmer first made a snare or noose of the wire and fastened it to the cane stick. Next he inserted the small end of the peeled switch in the slit of the long ash stick, which held open the prongs quite wide.

"Now," he said, "we're ready. Watch me."

HEART AND HOME

AM HAPPY: No harm can come. Do not go further, however.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young lady in a small town and I am trying to finish grade school this coming spring. What would be a suitable graduation dress?

I have pimples and blackheads on my face. Could you please tell me what to use to remove them?

How old should a girl be before she receives gentleman company?

The school is giving a Thanksgiving program. Do you think it would be appropriate to wear a red wool middie and blue serge skirt?

ONE WHO WANTS TO KNOW. A white dress is worn for graduation unless the class decides to adopt some other garb.

To cure blackheads make an ointment of one ounce of soap liniment and one ounce of ether; mix. At night scrub the face thoroughly with hot water, using a complexion or other soft brush. After wiping apply the mixture to each of the spots and let it remain over night. Wash off in the morning with hot water. Continue until the spots have disappeared. Then twice a week wash the face with this mixture, rubbing the liquid at once by rinsing with clear water. If there are large pores, wipe over each with a little alcohol.

For pimples that frequently appear with blackheads make an ointment of two grams of beta naphol, 20 grams of sulphur, precipitate and 20 grams of potato soap. Rub over the pimples at night. This may be used the same time as the blackhead mixture.

A girl should be 17 or 18 before she has gentleman company.

Ask your girl friends what they expect to wear to the school program and dress accordingly. Probably what you have in mind will be all right.

New Enterprises Do Not Come Into a City Where Local Firms are Having Poor Success

If you were selecting a city in which to open up a new business, what would you consider? The very first thing which would make a good or bad impression upon your mind would be the success with which the firms already in that city were meeting. If that city had business houses struggling along on a "hand-to-mouth" basis, you would not give it a second thought. On the other hand, if the city has thriving, bustling, busy, concerns, you will give it long and studied consideration. But remember, that the success of business houses is determined by the support they receive from the public. This is true of Janesville manufacturers. If Janesville people will not support Janesville enterprises, how can Janesville ever expect to get new ones?

How to Make a Tin-Can Holder

MATERIALS: Hard wood, stove bolts, a 10-penny nail, a 2-inch piece of broomstick.

In attempting to open a can at camp this summer, Mrs. Solar cut her finger so badly that it will probably never be straight again. This led her to design a tin-can holder to help prevent similar accidents in other families.

To make this holder, first plane up any piece of wood,  $\frac{3}{4}$ " x 10", for the base. Bore a small hole to hang up the device when it is not in use.

From a piece of hard wood, cut out the arms, with a coping saw. Round the handles, smoothing them by scraping with broken window glass. The strip used as a tightener should also be of hard wood, with a row of holes to fit a 10-penny nail, and another hole in the end to fit the stove bolt with which it is fastened to one arm. Each arm is fastened to the base with a stove bolt.

The knob, which holds the nail that is used as a stopper, can be made of a piece of soft wood or broom handle. The nail should fit in the knob tightly, so that it will not fall out whenever the tightener is released.

To operate, separate the arms, set the can in place, squeeze the arms, and insert the nail in a hole that will cause the can to be clamped tightly. Open the can with an ordinary can-opener. The leverage on the clamping arms is so great that the can is slightly dented with but very little pressure.

The Totem of Black Hawk

By EVERETT McNEIL

A sound, the most dreadful in all nature, the cry of human beings in whose veins the blood of the white man flows, and a hundred warriors, their faces inflamed with passion, surged toward the tree where Kar-ray-mau-nee and Brighteyes stood by the side of Gideon and Ruth. Before a hand could reach them, a distant shouting was heard, taken up instantly by the snarls and yaps of the dogs, and the sound of the wild tumult; Gideon and Ruth heard the name, Black Hawk!

The crushing Indians stopped at the sound of that dread name, halted; and in that moment of hesitation, Leaping Deer sprang in front of Gideon and Ruth and called on the maddened savages to await the coming of Black Hawk, their chief, and to abide by his decision. As he spoke, the shouting became louder and nearer; and then the mob of Indians in front of them parted, and down the open lane thus made strode an Indian dressed and armed and painted for war, closely followed by a dozen other heavily armed warriors.

He was a tall man, this Indian, with a spare, steel-strung frame, thin, hawklike features, and eyes that glowed with a fierce light. All the hair had been plucked out of his head, save a single bunch of eagle feathers, which was fastened to the spring of youth in his hair, although a man of over 50 years old, and looked straight ahead.

A striking figure he appeared to Gideon and Ruth, as he came down through the long line of savages, the red light of the camp fire lighting up his stern face and tall form.

In front of the prisoners, Black Hawk paused, his eyes turned swiftly from the face of one to the face of the other, and then passing to Leaping Deer and Kar-ray-mau-nee and Mike Girty.

Black Hawk, and he turned and faced the near-crowding warriors, "would know the meaning of this," and his eyes glanced from the form of Gideon, still bound to the tree, to the faces of the surrounding warriors.

Mike Girty at once took a quick step toward the chief and opened his mouth to speak. But, with an imperious gesture, the chief silenced him.

"Black Hawk will hear the tongue of an Indian speak first," and, with a look of contempt, he turned his back on Girty. "Let the tongue of Leaping Deer tell Black Hawk why the men were about to burn a prisoner during the absence of their chief," and his eyes sought the face of that chief.

Leaping Deer at once, briefly and clearly narrated the happenings of that day, so far as they concerned the prisoners, from the time of their capture to the present moment.

Black Hawk listened to him in silence, without an emotion showing on his stern face and with hardly a movement of his rigidly erect body. The moment he ceased speaking the chief turned to the young Indian, who still stood by the side of Gideon, his right hand still on the haft of his knife.

"Why does Kar-ray-mau-nee call the white prisoner brother?" he asked.

Kar-ray-mau-nee's face flushed, and his black eyes lighted. He took a step toward Black Hawk and replied:

He told of the day of the Big Fire, of his race for life with it, of how, when his strength failed him and the jaws of the Red Death were about to shut down on him, the white man and the boy had come to his aid, and how they had refused to desert him, even when they could feel the hot breath of the Red Death blistering their backs, and had half-dragged and half-carried him to safety, at the peril of their own lives.

Not a betrayer. Kar-ray-mau-nee saved him, or Kar-ray-mau-nee did with him. Kar-ray-mau-nee has spoken," he ended, and stepped back to the side of Gideon.

Immovable, expressionless, as before, the stern chief had listened to the words of the young Indian; and now, without a word, without a sign to show whether he approved or condemned, he turned to Brighteyes. "Why does the daughter of Black Hawk hold the hand of the white man and call her sister?" he asked.

Brighteyes, still holding the hand of the white man, stepped close to the chief. "Brighteyes is the daughter of Black Hawk," she answered, proudly.

"Black Hawk has taught his daughter to return good for good, service for service. This is the white girl whose father and mother saved Brighteyes and baby on the night of the Big Rain, gave her and baby shelter and food, cared for them as if they were their own, until Great Spirit came and took them home."

Black Hawk's face had remained as expressionless as before, while Brighteyes was speaking; until she spoke of the totem and of the great deed of the white man, and then, as if by a flash of lightning, the moment she completed her story, he strode to the side of Gideon, lifted the little black hawk in one of his hands, examined it closely for an instant, and then, straightening up proudly, turned to Kar-ray-mau-nee.

"Free the prisoner," he commanded. "Black Hawk will protect his own," and he turned and faced the encircling warriors.

As the knife of Kar-ray-mau-nee came from his sheath and began cutting the things that bound Gideon to the tree, Mike Girty, who had been ed with baffled rage, started to voice an angry protest; but, before he had spoken ten words, Black Hawk turned imperiously upon him.

"Silence, dog of a white man!" he commanded. "Black Hawk has spoken."

Girty, for an instant, looked into the chief's glowing eyes, and then slunk back and disappeared behind the crowd of Indians.

For a minute, Black Hawk stood facing his braves, waiting to see if there were any others to question his decision, but not another voice was raised in protest.

"It is well," he said, and turned to Brighteyes. "The daughter of Black Hawk did right in calling the white girl sister, in giving her the protection of the totem of Black Hawk. Black Hawk would save the mother of the white girl and boy, bring the white woman here," and he turned to Leaping Deer.

Leaping Deer hurried to where the muscular arms of two warriors had been forcibly detaining Mrs. Clay during these exciting scenes, and bade them release her.

The instant Mrs. Clay was free she ran to Gideon, and in a moment mother and son were in each other's arms.

A mild light came into the eyes of Black Hawk and the hard lines on his face softened as he watched this touching union of mother and son, who, a few minutes before, thought never to meet again in this life.

When Mrs. Clay turned from Gideon to thank his protectors, Black Hawk stood in front of her. Briefly the chief thanked her for the care she had given his daughter and her baby, bade her fear no longer, since now she and her children were under the protection of Black Hawk, and promised, at the first opportunity, to restore them all to the anxious father and husband.

The moment Black Hawk finished speaking, Mrs. Clay attempted to thank him, but the chief drew himself up haughtily.

"Black Hawk wants not the thanks of the white woman," he said. "The white people are his enemies; they have robbed him, have driven him from the home of his fathers, from the graves of his ancestors, and the blood of his warriors is heavy and full of hatred for the whites. But an Indian never forgets a kindness. Black Hawk is an Indian and remembers. He pays his debts. He soars to be under obligations to the whites. He wipes out the obligation, so that there will be only hatred in his heart. You are free; and the heart of Black Hawk is satisfied. He can now have all without cost, and the chief turned abruptly from Mrs. Clay, spoke a few words of command to the surrounding warriors, and strode off.

During this scene the sympathetic eyes of Brighteyes had turned often to the sick child in Mrs. Clay's arms, and now she stepped to her side.

"Be-bie sick?" she asked.

Mrs. Clay nodded and glanced anxiously down into the wan little face. "Come," and Brighteyes touched her arm. "Brighteyes knows squaw who is very old and very wise. She will cure be-bie. Come," and, melon-like Gideon and Ruth to follow, she led Mrs. Clay to her own wigwam. Gideon, before he followed, turned and gripped the hand of Kar-ray-mau-nee and tried to tell him what he thought of his coming so bravely to his rescue; but the words choked in his throat and he was forced to turn and abruptly hurry after Ruth and his mother, to keep the Indian boy from seeing the tears in his eyes. But the face of Kar-ray-mau-nee showed that he understood what the white boy wanted to say.

On the skin-covered floor of the wigwam of Brighteyes played a healthy, copper-colored youngster, of about the same age as the child in Mrs. Clay's arms, who, the moment they entered, turned on them a pair of black, curious eyes.

Mike Collins' Story

Inner Life of Irish Hero Told by Body Guard.

(Copyright 1922, By The World-Wide News Service, Inc., Boston.)

CHAPTER V

The Secrets of Downing Street

It is a matter of history now—at least a matter of Irish history—that the man who carried Michael Collins, who was on his way to deliver a speech at Killarney, both failed. With only O'Reilly by his side he got put at the rally at the end of the road, and the rest of us were not far away from being sure. In the crowd he could see the faces of a score of men, all personally known to him, who had one and all vowed to take his life.

He had not even a look to spare for one of them as he walked to the place where he was advertised to speak. Such was his disdain of them that he did not so much as glance at the man who was to deliver with fifty gunmen in the crowd, all armed against him and waiting for some signal to shoot.

I think he never spoke more calmly and more loudly in the whole course of his life; and there were we, all on the stretch, and just waiting for the trouble to begin. I would not have given a penny for his chance of surviving to the end of that speech; and yet not a man among them had the nerve to lose his gun.

A king of men he was that day, with his head thrown back in defiance of them all, and his voice ringing out so that every man and woman there could hear every word he said. That was but one among the many times he had won the bluff death which lay in ambush for him, and win out on the bluff.

At that time he could not bring himself to believe that any man would change his opinion afterwards. But at the last, when he knew they meant to have his life—as we can see now—he neither shunned the death he foresaw was to be his, nor would he think of any avenging hand punishing his slayers.

It is by his strict orders almost his last command that Ireland is spared the war of reprisals which otherwise would have followed. Michael Collins had foreseen his own death, and had forbidden any tactics of revenge. How many of us would wish to even that score if only the sacred commands of the dead did not forbid it.

"To Hell for Michael."

Have you ever heard what the young man said in the Hall when Mary McSwiney was reproaching us for following Michael Collins, wanting to know nothing more of where we were going except that Michael was there at the head of the line.

"To Hell for Michael," she said, "would you follow him there?"

"We would," and if we could bring him back today there's not fifty but five hundred I know, who would gladly go down to Hell, as Mary McSwiney said, and pay the price for his turn of our kind leader. He who would not have the blood of an enemy shed uselessly, and thought death too severe a punishment except for those who were guilty of worse things than most of our war-fare has willed that revenge must not be taken.

Let me tell you of an ambush that Michael Collins planned and that Sean McSwiney carried out at Ballinacorney. The auxiliaries were riding as usual, in a big lorry, when a bomb exploded near it with sufficient force to overturn it and put it out of action, though the men in it were not shaken. They showed their spirit by taking to their rifles, and from the shelter of a ditch put up a good fight against a much greater force properly entrenched in safe hideouts.

The fight lasted as long as the auxiliaries had any ammunition. When their last cartridge was spent we came out from all sides, and they had to run to their hands. Mike shook hands with them leader and told him they had put up a good fight, and that we were sorry that some of their men had been injured by the ordinary fortune of war. That surprised the Englishman more than a little, and for a few minutes we all stood and chatted in a friendly fashion.

Then the end came very suddenly. Another body, much more numerous than the motor lorries along the road, the motor lorries drove at a speed which showed that the men in them had got wind of what was going on. So we melted away just as we had appeared, and we left a scout behind who could hear the captain of the Black and Tars telling the newcomers that McKee was a good sportsman, and it was worse than useless to try to follow him.

"They've Done No Harm," or "They have done no harm," was the form of words the Big Fellow mostly used when speaking of the men who carried arms against him. His policy was not to take their lives, for of what use would that have been? He was trying to create an international sentiment in favor of some sweetened version of the rule of Ireland. That, as history tells, is what he succeeded in doing.

Merciful he was, in the very essence of him, but when he had seen of what he considered crimes against humanity he could be the sternest judge and the most relentless of executioners.

There was a court-martial held once—the story of it was published in some of the papers—and the result was the execution of a half-witted boy.

It might stir up memories of things that had been forgotten. I told how that court-martial was avoided.

All the time that he was fighting and planning and organizing Michael Collins was learning as well. He was but a young man when he was called to the head of the National forces of Ireland, with but one settled conviction. It was the conviction that Ireland was to be ruled by the people, and that it was to be arranged he had yet to decide.

The breaking-point between the pro-Treaty rebels and those who are now rebels against the Irish Free State is the oath of allegiance to the Throne of the British Empire. It was a hard pill for many to swallow, as anybody with two sides to his mind will agree, if he stops long enough to think it out. Many of the agreements I have heard of, when one points out to Michael, when one reads into his mind, it really does itself into this:

"The Irish in Canada, in Australia, in Africa, and everywhere where the British flag flies are bound by the same oath," he would say. "An Irishman in the United States, when he becomes an American citizen, has to acknowledge the sovereignty of that country. Irishmen at home can be content with just as much as Irishmen who have left home."

Opinion of Lloyd George.

He was not one of those who complained that he had been terrified into signing by Mr. Lloyd George's solemn warning that the alternative was a war against Ireland, waged with all the resources of the British Empire and its dominions. That was an alternative which Michael Collins, and Griffiths as well, had foreseen long before the English Prime Minister employed it as a solemn threat. Sooner than abandon any honest conviction he held Michael would have faced the alternative, well though he knew what the end of it would have been.

Yet even he was deeply impressed by that memorable scene, when at the midnight hour, when all seemed to be lost, the Prime Minister played his last card.

"His words would drive the color from the face of the most reckless," Michael told us. "He spoke like Joe holding a thunderbolt in his hand, unwilling to loose it, since he could not recall it again when once it was free from his control."

It was after the solemn warning given by Mr. Lloyd George that some put to the Treaty their signatures, which they afterwards thought well to withdraw. They excused themselves by saying that the occasion of their delivery, had carried them away from their real opinion, and made them put pen to paper they never meant to sign.

The life of Michael Collins, both before the signing and after it, has stamped him as a man who could be induced by no such art and excuse to change his mind. He had obtained what he wanted for Ireland when the Treaty had been amended to his liking, and he signed it willingly. All the world knows now that he gave his life rather than go back from his written promise.

Michael Collins betrayed neither Ireland nor England; he fought for one and against the other, until he could join the two in a common cause worth fighting for. Then he fought and died for both.

He admired Mr. Lloyd George immensely, and never hesitated to say so; but the man who got his liking and appealed to his understanding, most was Mr. Winston Churchill.

"When I met him first," Michael told me, "Winston Churchill looked me in the eye, with just the meaning that I came to meet a man of whom I had heard much and knew but little. May be, I gave Winston Churchill much the same look as he gave me; I felt I wanted to see who was behind that big, clever-looking English face of his. So we faced one another, eye to eye, like two men much interested, but in no way fearing or distrustful of one another."

"Then our hands went out, as if by common impulse. I wanted to say to him: 'You'll do for me, Mr. Winston Churchill,' but instead, we just gripped each other in the English fashion. From that moment I knew that whoever else wanted to deny Ireland a square deal, it was not Winston Churchill."

There was many a time afterwards, in the long and weary talks we had, so full of words that were dangerous, and acts that were not safe, that Mr. Churchill's words came back to me. Mr. Churchill would say something which showed just how much he understood, and how eagerly he desired his colleagues to understand with him."

Eat and

This is turning an old phrase face about, but modern methods of reducing fat have made this revision possible.

If you are overfat and also averse to physical exertion; if you are tired of the fads and fashions of the fadists, do this: Go to your druggist for the Marmola Company's (Woodward Avenue, Detroit, Mich.) and give him (or send them) one dollar for this modest amount of Marmola Prescription Tablets.

Just go on eating what you like, leave your diet alone, but take your little tablet faithfully, and without a doubt that flabby flesh will quickly take into itself wings, leave you behind in your natural self, neatly clothed in firm flesh and trim muscles.

HINTS FOR THE MOTORIST

ALBERT L. CLOUGH

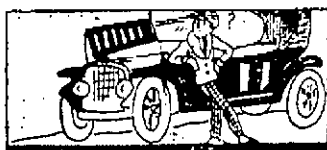

Copyright, 1922, by the International Syndicate

Splash Lubrication That Doesn't Splash

If The "Drops" In A Housing Won't Disturb, It Might As Well Not Be There

MOTORISTS GENERALLY understand that the gears and bearings in the transmission and rear-axle housing are lubricated by oil or light grease, which is splashed over the gear faces and into collecting pockets leading to the bearings, by the rotation of one of the gears in the housing, which dips into the lubricant, with which the bottom of the case is filled. The one essential requirement for successful splash lubrication is that the lubricant be fluid enough to splash, that is, it must flow readily enough so that the gear faces can distribute it to other parts of the mechanism and so that it will drip back to the bottom of the case and maintain a definite level there, from which the gears can pick it up for re-distribution. If the lubricant used ever becomes so stiff that it ceases to seek its level, the gears merely cut it away, until they no longer touch it, and no further distributing action takes place—the gear faces and bearings soon becoming dry and wearing rapidly. Every motorist realizes that an oil or grease, which will flow freely when warm will become stiff enough to "stand alone" if it becomes sufficiently cold, but too often the practical application of this fact is neglected and rear axles are kept filled, during cold weather, with lubricant which is too nearly solid to permit of any splashing action whatever, taking place. This condition means the damage or ruin of many axles each winter, this part of the car being specially subject to this evil, because engine heat does not reach the rear-end enough to restore the lubricant to a more fluid condition in the case and not bank up where the gear cannot reach it for distribution purposes. The addition of light oil implies that some of the thinned lubricant be later drawn off so that its level may not be too high.

WHAT MILEAGE BEFORE REBORING IS NEEDED?

J. O. S. asks: About how many miles ought a car to run before the cylinders get worn so much that boring out becomes necessary, assuming that the engine has reasonably good care?

Answer: This is a difficult question, there being but little obtainable data bearing upon the subject, but after somewhere between 25,000 and 35,000 miles of service, the cylinders of the average passenger car are likely to need re-boring. Engines sometimes run 50,000 miles or more and still show fair economy and quietness and, on the other hand the cylinders of some engines may be found badly worn after 15,000 miles or even less. The quality of cylinder metal, the angularity of the connecting rods, the piston speed, the weight, length and material of the pistons, the quality of oil used and the frequency with which it is renewed together with the intensity of service demanded and the operator's driving habits all enter to make the re-boring period very difficult to predict.

CAUSE OF SMOKY EXHAUST
A. W. W. writes: The engine of my car smokes badly when it is speeded up. What is the cause of and remedy for this?

Answer: If it smokes only when first speeded up, after running idle for a time, this is not unusual and nothing need be done about it, but if it smokes persistently when on the road, it is probable that you are using an oil which is not of the best quality, that your oil-pressure is higher than need be, that you are carrying too high an oil level or that the piston rings are so worn or badly fitted that they do not scrape back excess oil from the cylinder walls, but let it get up into the combustion spaces, where it is vaporized and passes off as smoke.

Questions of general interest to the motorist will be answered by Mr. Clough in this column, space permitting. If an immediate answer is desired, enclose self-addressed, stamped envelope.

—CADILLAC—

A trifle more compact than the seven-passenger Suburban, the Sedan has a distinctive smartness of line that marks it unquestionably as one of the most beautiful models Cadillac has produced.

It is commodious yet companionable; and while large enough for family and friends, has the easy driving qualities of the Coupe.

The distinction and elegance of the five-passenger Sedan appeal irresistibly to those to whom good taste and dignity, as opposed to mere novelty, are always important considerations.

Belle Boyd, Confederate Spy

SOUTHERN HEROINE, BURIED AT KILBOURN.

BY MARION E. USHER
On the Wisconsin river, in the state of Wisconsin, there is situated a pretty town named Kilbourn, known chiefly because of its scenic attraction, the Belts. Comparatively few persons in the United States know that in Spring Grove cemetery in Kilbourn a woman who was a national and international figure during the Civil war is buried. On her monument is the following inscription:
BELLE BOYD
Confederate Spy
Born in Virginia
Died in Wisconsin
Belle Boyd was the most noted woman spy of the confederacy. Her career was thrilling. Her history reads like a work of fiction. She was a young southern girl of good family and good breeding, with attractiveness, fascination, education, strong convictions, great daring. She bore a charming life and was the daughter of a prominent family. She was married many times, repudiated, banished. She took refuge in England and while there wrote a book entitled "Belle Boyd, or the Story of her Adventures, Misfortunes and Impersonations." Her fascinating and graphic narrative is, perhaps, as little known as is her burial place.
She was born in 1844, in Martinsburg, Va., now West Virginia. In the lovely Shenandoah valley. Her mother was the daughter of an officer. Belle's home was two-story. The Belle's home was a two-story house, whose walls were hidden by roses and honeysuckles. Near the house were a garden and a pretty stream. The air was soft and fragrant—the air of the sunny south.
Belle was educated at the age of 15 years she entered society in our national capital, where her uncle and aunt lived. The season of 1860-61 was a brilliant one. Belle went home. Her father, John Read Boyd, enlisted in the Confederate army, and was in that section known as the "Stoep-wall Brigade."
Martinsburg, being on the border of the state of Virginia, was a bone of contention during the war. It was alternately held by Federal and Confederate forces. When the Federal troops first entered the town, Belle was in a hospital attending two wounded Confederate soldiers. A Union captain came into the place to look into matters there. Belle began her war career by defying him. Before he left he emphatically expressed his opinion that she was an "independent rebel lady."
The Federal troops were going to raise the Stars and Stripes over the Boyd home. Mrs. Boyd declared to them that every member of her household would die before a Union flag should be raised over her house. A Union soldier, it was alleged by Belle, then spoke offensively to her mother and to her, and Belle shot and killed him. The soldiers were going to burn the house in retaliation, but Belle got a message conveyed to the Federal officer in command, and he prevented its destruction. The commanding officer called to investigate the matter of the shooting, and after inquiring into the circumstances declared that Belle had done right. Sentinels were placed around the house, and Federal officers called every day to inquire if the family had any complaint to make concerning the behavior of the troops. A fine pistol was presented to Belle by a Federal officer as a token of admiration of the spirit she had shown in defense of her mother and her home. Later it was brought to Washington, placed in the War Department, and labeled, "A trophy captured from the celebrated rebel, Belle Boyd."
Belle's residence within the Federal lines and her acquaintance

GEN. U. S. HOLLISTER VISITS HONOLULU

Brother Joseph Dutton writes from Kailua, Molokai, Hawaii, that Gen. U. S. Hollister, former resident of Janesville and now of Los Angeles, has returned to the California city. Gen. Hollister attended old Milton academy at the same time Brotherton Dutton was a student in 1859-60. Gen. Hollister served in the Thirtieth Wisconsin in the Civil war as lieutenant of Co. K.
He is called "General" by all who know him from his long service in Denver, Colo., in the interest of the C. & A. R. as the head of the department of Colorado and Wyoming. Gen. Hollister was a resident of Janesville when he enlisted and will be remembered by the few survivors of the 13th and the older residents. When he landed at Honolulu he was photographed by one of the cut printed herewith is from that snapshot sent to the Gazette by Brother Dutton. with many officers enabled her to gain information concerning the Federal forces, which she recorded in writing, and when the opportunity offered, sent a dispatch to Confederate officers. One of her messages fell into Federal hands. Her writing was identified and she was summoned to headquarters, threatened, reprimanded, and the article of war regarding aiding and abetting an enemy of the government, the penalty for which might be death, was read to her. She bowed, anxiously said, "Thank you, gentlemen of the jury," and left. From that time she was a "suspect."
On every possible occasion she concealed and concealed the pistol and sword of the Federalists and smuggled them away to the Confederate camp. At that time the Federal officers little dreamed who had taken them. Belle acted as courier between Gen. Donatien and Stonewall Jackson and their subordinates.
One evening at Martinsburg she went horseback riding with two officers and a friend. Her horse became frightened, ran away and carried her within the Federal lines. She rode up to the officer in command of the pickets and explained how she happened to be there.
"We are exceedingly proud of our beautiful captive," said the officer.

"But, of course, we cannot think of detaining you," she replied.
He informed her that she would be escorted back beyond their lines. So she rode back with two Federal officers beyond their lines. Suddenly the two Confederate officers appeared. All four officers were greatly surprised.
"Here are two prisoners I have brought you," said Belle to the Confederates.
The Federal officers inquired who she was. "Belle Boyd," she replied. "The rebel spy!" they exclaimed.
They were taken to headquarters and the adventure was related to the officer in command. Within an hour the two Federal officers were released.
Belle was soon arrested and taken to Baltimore. After a week's imprisonment in one of the best hotels in the city, the Fairfax House, she was released and sent back to Martinsburg.
She then went to Front Royal, Va., where her uncle and aunt had their home. When the war began their southern sympathies were strong and they thought it wise to leave Washington. Their fine residence here was converted into a burg rack.
Belle found their home in Front Royal in the possession of Federal troops. A council was held by the Federalists in the drawing room. Above it was a bedroom with a clothes closet. In the floor of that closet she and a hole had been bored. She listened all the evening and too late in the night she heard. It was after 1 o'clock the next morning when the council adjourned, but she dodged her horse and galloped away toward the mountains to convey the information she had obtained. She had some passes which had been procured for Confederate soldiers to turn south, but were supposed to be of no further use. When she was challenged by Union sentries, however, she flourished those passes and dodged her horse and galloped away across fields and marshes and at the end of a 15-mile ride gave her news to Col. Asbury.
In returning home she galloped past a sleeping sentry, who awakened to see her horse disappear around a turn which she had been told he was about to send after her. After a two-hour ride she reached her aunt's house, unaided her horse, but at daybreak she "turned in," as she expressed it.
On one occasion a picket was stationed between their farmyard and the dairy. The dairymaid was not allowed to milk the cows without a pass signed by the officer of the day. Belle considered this was a nuisance and wrote the following pass and had it signed:
"These cows have permission to pass to and from the yard and dairy for the purpose of being milked twice a day until further orders."
She pasted the pass between the horns of one of the cows. It had the desired effect for the cows were not sent to the dairy. Whenever the pass came off the head of the cow she replaced it by another.
Eric common stock has been steadily bought for some time past by interests concerned in the control of large western systems terminating in Chicago.
With payment of the second installment of $50,000,000 interest by Great Britain on November 15, total interest received by the United States in the first half of the month totals $50,000,000, against $4,617,507 in the same period of 1921, and for the fiscal year to date $114,900,000, against $13,174,635 in 1921. ## Money Market and Business in the United States

New York.—During the last thirty days, commercial and industrial activity has reflected the usual stimulation of fall and winter demand. Retail trade in the larger cities is more active than at the corresponding period of last year, and seasonal celebration is already throughout the country. Uncertainty as to the volume of purchases by the farmers of the grain and livestock states has not been dispelled, however. Wholesale trade has been good throughout the current period. Stocks of many kinds of goods in the hands both of wholesale and retail dealers are light, but neither this fact nor threat of tightness has been sufficient to induce buyers to make substantial forward purchases. The conservatism shown justifies the belief that the cash rates have been too high for some time. The report of the National Bank of Commerce.
Total car loadings and loadings of merchandise and of less than carload lots are practically at the record levels established in 1920. Despite car shortage, especially for coal and for the movement of farm products, the railroads are handling freight, remarkably well. Coal has been rapidly moved to the lake ports for shipment to the Northwest before the close of navigation. Receipts of wheat at primary markets to date, somewhat less than in the corresponding period of 1921, are well above average for 1920. The livestock movement is satisfactory. Cotton is moving more rapidly than in 1921. Some industrial coal reserves, and the disappearance of premiums for immediate delivery is evidence of improved transportation.
The movement of raw materials as a whole is operating at not far below normal. Steel output is at 75 per cent of capacity. There has been a notable expansion of pig iron production which for October exceeded any month since December, 1920. Railroad orders continue heavy. Demand from the automobile and building industries is good, due to the being taken of seasonal declines. Buying is still light. The indications seem to be that demand for steel may slacken somewhat during the remainder of the year, but the recovery will be made early in 1923. Demand for machine tools is fair.
The woolen and worsted industry is at between 85 and 90 per cent of capacity. Text and shoe manufacturers range from 80 per cent in New England to capacity at St. Louis. Cotton consumption in October was 520,500 bales, compared with 494,745 and 501,245 bales in October, 1921, and 1920 respectively. October output of automobiles made a new high record for that month. Building is exceptional active for the season this year. Production has been reflected in the various industries producing building materials.
Purchases of war obligations by the United States for sinking fund are

Public Buying Is Absent This Week in Stock Market

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]
New York.—Public buying power was noticeably conspicuous for its absence in this week's stock market. Speculators for the decline being in control most of the time and hampering down prices of active shares one to six points. Bond prices also fell to lower ground.
In view of the fact that railroad shares which had offered good resistance during the early part of the reaction, were the most vulnerable targets during the last week, there was ground for the belief that the course of prices was part of the general collapse.
60,000 working part time, receiving benefits from the government, against 42,221 the previous year. These figures explain why wages and commodity prices in England continued to decline during October, according to the returns received for that month. While in this country, with a growing shortage of labor, wages and commodity prices continued upward.
The Standard Milling company recently declared a stock dividend of 60 per cent on common stock. The company owns about a dozen flour mills in various parts of the country, including one in Kansas. Common stock is at $7.10, on which 8 to 10 per cent dividends have been paid for several years. Surplus is 16 1/2 million dollars. The stock advanced 5 points, to 135 recently. There is only occasional transactions in it.
Mexican oil exports in October were 23,062,314 barrels, 2,805,470 more than for September.

Farmers Urged to Collect Field Products for Rock County Booth.

By Rock-Co-Wis
COOPERATION has made Rock county one of the outstanding counties in Wisconsin—the leading livestock and dairy state of the world.

No other county has made such advances in county development and has been put before the public eye to such a good advantage. Sincerely, however, opportunities have been developed until the approach of 1923 puts Rock county in a position to take a commanding lead in agriculture. The year's success was possible through a number of agencies and the future success will be determined in just how these and other agencies cooperate and boost the "Rock County First" spirit along.

Looking back over the year and the many achievements will take pride that Rock had its best farm prod-

Canada Has Prize Junior Stock Clubs

Fifteen hundred boys and girls in Quebec are the proud possessors of hogs. Boys and girls clubs all over the province are organizing to put the raising of hogs on a basis of greater prosperity than it has known before.

The Quebec government, in cooperation with the Dominion government, is assisting in the organization work and applications have been received from several hundred youngsters for admittance into the clubs. A government official is constantly traveling between the various clubs, inspecting and giving advice on the breeding and raising of the animals. Already this year seven carloads of hogs have been received by Montreal packing companies from the clubs, and are being shipped to various parts of the province.

CUT PRODUCTION OF WHEAT CROPS

Government Report Shows Consumption Increasing, Production Lower.

(By Associated Press.)
Washington—An outstanding fact facing the American wheat farmer, says the annual year book of the department of agriculture, is that while the wheat crop in this country has steadily increased, there has been a gradual decrease in per capita production. This tendency probably will continue, it is added, unless the United States reaches the point where it consumes practically all the wheat it produces.

The economic situation of the wheat crop, production and marketing, from seed to the consumer, is presented in the yearbook. The discussion is the result of combined research and study by a number of the nation's leading agronomists and agricultural economists connected with the department.

Many Grow Wheat
It is known that nearly a third of the farmers in the United States grow wheat. On the average, each farmer has about 100 acres of wheat, and normally only those two crops and cotton exceed wheat value. The wheat crop as a whole has much to do with the prosperity of the United States, because the wheat enters into foreign trade to a greater extent than any other crop except cotton.

The country has exported a surplus of wheat every year of its history except 1918, besides keeping pace with an ever-increasing demand at home. During the past 20 years, however, the yearbook states, the volume of exports has decreased except under the artificial stimulation of the recent war.

Because of improvements in milling processes which make bread more attractive, increasing prosperity, and the increasing proportion of the population in the cities, the per capita consumption of wheat has increased in the United States for the past 20 years.

Consume More Bread
City dwellers eat more bread, per capita, than country residents, because of the lack of gardens in cities, the comparative cheapness of bread, and because no home cooking is necessary. The fact that the trend of population is toward cities should have much bearing on the future consumption of bread, it is stated.

Before 1850 the per capita consumption of wheat in this country was 3.8 bushels; from 1850 to 1884 it was 4.8 bushels; and from 1884 to 1914, 5.8 bushels. The rising trend was interrupted by the world war, but department officials believe it has been resumed.

If the nation is to increase its bread production to any great extent it must grow more wheat or import it, the department says.

Footnote Farmers Ship With Bureau

Chicago—The Footnote Livestock Shipping Association, of Footnote, Wis., was on the Chicago market this morning with two cars of stock; one straight load of hogs sold on the early trade for $7.20 and $7.70, strong prices for the day; the other load was a mixed load of cattle, calves and hogs.

The Footnote Livestock Shipping Association sold this stock through the Chicago Producers' Commission, the farmer-owned and controlled co-operative commission association, which was established at the Chicago Stock Yards, June 10, 1922. Last week this Commission marketed 151 cars of stock, the largest number since it started, 145 carloads of hogs were handled during the week, which was more than the amount handled by any one of the 100 firms in the yards.

Stock is shipped through the Chicago Producers' Commission Association is marketed at cost. The shipper pays the regular commission charge but signs a membership application at the time of shipping and at the end of the year receives a patronage dividend, which is his share of the savings, based on the amount of business done.

variety is desired from soybeans, apples, honey and down the list to the different varieties of corn.

Seek Many Varieties
The spray rings will take charge of collecting the fruit needed. Farmers interested are urged to "feed" their trees this winter and take particular care of fertilizing trees to obtain exceptional quality samples.

The bookkeeper's association will have a part of the exhibit. Other groups are wanted that will promise prize potatoes, a big variety of corn, legumes, shrubs and etc.

The material produced then will be collected next year, sorted over, culled out, prepared for exhibiting with the owner's name to show under the Rock county banner. Such a policy is good county cooperation. Farmers should enjoy more seed business in the county and the best way to attract this business is to show what the county raises.

That is one of the projects in keeping "Rock County First" in 1923. The livestock angle will be considered in a second article.

70 Schools in State Livestock Judging Contest

Seventy schools will compete in the annual high school stock judging contest to be held in the state during the present winter.

The round-up of the district tournaments will be staged here in March.

Every high school in the state is eligible to compete regardless of whether or not a teacher of agriculture is employed. Teams from schools without such instructors are being coached by prominent stockmen of the respective vicinities.

It is now planned to hold the judging contest at the same time as the state basketball tournament thus availing the teams with the excursion rates and adding a strong attraction to these field days.

The committee in charge of the preliminary or elimination contests and the state tournament consists of James A. James of the agricultural staff of the University of Wisconsin in Wisconsin, is the state representative of the State Department of Public Instruction; G. W. Brainerd, state supervisor of vocational education; M. C. Kelley of Green county, representing the team coaches; and Reid Murray, secretary of the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeder's Association, expected to furnish judge for the preliminary trials in as many places as possible.

HICKORY DALE SHROPSHIRE

Hickory Dale Shropshire.
Rock county is the home of championship sheep.
One of the main reasons why the county always scores high on livestock at the state fair and other livestock competitions is the sheep raised by several breeders.

The Hickory Dale farms, now owned by the A. Broughton sons, Magnolia township, has one of the best flocks of Shropshire sheep in the United States. Between the Broughton brothers and W. G. Miles, Evansville, Rock made a clean sweep on the Shropshire ribbons at the last state fair.

There is 523 acres divided up into the farms of the four sons of Arthur Broughton, the founder of the famous herd. The sons now interested in the flocks are Roy, Harry, Cal and Lynn Broughton, all county boosters and as good sheep breeders as there are in the county.

History of Farm.
Hickory Dale proper was taken up as government land in 1842 by Aaron Broughton, father of the late Arthur Broughton. The present flock was founded in 1850 by the purchase of 20 imported ewes that were mated to imported Buttar rams.

There is now 150 breeding ewes on the splendid farms and out of this flock 16 breeding sheep and three yearling wethers are being groomed for the coming Chicago International. The brothers have a splendid class of four yearlings sired by Buttar's Corston Royal, a championship ram at previous fat stock shows.

Sheep Exhibit.
For years the Broughton flock has won top ribbons at the fairs and international. Their prize winnings show more royal purple and blue ribbons at the international and state fairs than any other breeder of the "Shrops".

Consequently Rock county will be well represented at the Chicago show with sheep. W. G. Miles, Evansville, has culled out the flocks that clean up at the southern fairs and sending a number down. Miles breeds a variety of sheep and scored more than 100 at the 1922 state fair than any other breeder.

Sheep from the Broughton brothers' farms and from W. G. Miles are sold all over the world and sales have been made to the leading flocks of the United States. There was a time when the sheep business looked dubious but under present prices, sheep raising is one of the most productive branches of livestock.

15,000 Tons of Lime Used on Rock County Farms

FIFTY thousand tons of lime to enrich the soils of Rock county.

The biggest soils development program in Wisconsin, and probably the United States, has been put over in Rock county during a period of 18 months. Through the proper cooperation between the Farm Bureau, County Board, University and the farmers at least 5,000 acres of Rock county soils have already been enriched through applications of limestone. The results have been remarkable in increased yield and the results will continue to tell in the future. The work has just obtained a good start.

In no small way the rural schools cooperated to aid in the soils development. The rural students made two complete soil tests in townships in which soil from every 40 acres was analyzed by the college of agriculture and farmers advised of the actual needs of practically every acre.

There is an important cycle in soils development. Rich soils are needed to produce food for livestock and in turn livestock provide the chief fertilizer to make rich soils.

Rock county farmers are taking hold of the fertilization problem in time to prevent any serious "cropping out" of soils. The farmer cannot grow crop after crop on even rich prairie land and leave fertility enough to continue big yields.

There is land on Rock Prairie which at one time yielded as high as 75 bushels of corn to the acre but does well to produce 20 bushels. The decrease is due to the steady robbing of the land of its natural richness and nutrient. It is in deficiency in the substances needed for such high crop production. Not only does the good farm measure the worth of its land by the yield but also of the crop quality in feed production. It takes good crops to feed a dairy herd, to put beef and fat on feeder cattle and meat on hogs at a profit.

Service of Bureau
Eighteen months ago the Farm Bureau purchased four lime-stone crushers and distributed them around the county. These machines have been busy grinding out lime, obtained near perfect. It is in deficiency in the substances needed for such high crop production. Not only does the good farm measure the worth of its land by the yield but also of the crop quality in feed production. It takes good crops to feed a dairy herd, to put beef and fat on feeder cattle and meat on hogs at a profit.

soils, improves the physical condition of heavy soils, supplies lime to growing plants or makes available to crops other elements in the soil.

Farmers have saved thousands by the fact the Bureau purchased the crushers and grinding immediately in the sections where big crops are obtained. It saves freight and long hauling costs and is much cheaper.

Crushers Working
George Nelson is now grinding on the farm of Mrs. Addie Butler near the junction of the Afton road and Route 20 on the west side of Rock river. Nelson is filling a 200 ton order in this section and ground about 200 tons on the Afton road on the east side of the river. There was 300 tons ground from a pile in the Langdon White farm, southwest of Afton and about 150 tons on the farm of Arthur Woodstock north of the village. He has orders enough to keep the Bureau machine "humming" until the weather prevents operation.

The second machine is being operated by Roy Cole in Newark township. L. M. Buttriss has the third machine in the Orfordville section.

Milk, Butter, Cheese and Ice Cream

The Indispensable Foods

Milk and its products, Butter, Ice Cream and Cheese, are the most nourishing of all foods for people of all ages. They are likewise the most healthful of all foods.

Milk, Butter, Ice Cream and Cheese are superior to all other foods because they contain, in addition to the elements of other foods, a certain substance indispensable to the growth and health of the child and the efficiency of the adult. The presence of this essential substance in milk and its products, places these foods in a class by themselves as the most important of all foods in promoting growth and health and in the development of a class of people superior in all respects to those not using these vital foods.

Dr. McCollum of Johns Hopkins University, one of the foremost authorities on food, has demonstrated that there are no substitutes for Milk, Butter, Ice Cream and Cheese in the human diet. Other leading food scientists have reached this same conclusion.

These authorities have found that the people who use milk and its products liberally, are the people who achieve, who become large, strong and vigorous people, who reduce their infant mortality, and who are progressive in science and in every activity of the human intellect.

Milk and its products should be used freely in every American home in every possible way.
